Parking Lag Laid to Suits

Additional parking facilities for Love Field, the Civil Aeronautics Board has said, have been stymied by recent lawsuits, keep saying that Dallas will not but the situation should improve soon this if Fort Worth gets the within a year, Aviation Director air line business moved to Carter George P. Coker Jr. told the City Council Monday.

In an informal department head said Coker. "But we know better than that," briefing, the aviation chief said. "New Jersey," after a series of tragic accidents, diverted its air field "was the most publicized traffic 10 years ago to Idlewild," document of all — and anyone knew where and how long our runways were planned.

"After 18 months, New Jersey had lost 30 per cent of its area apartment occupancy and 20 per cent of its retail shops."

Litigation by adjacent property owners held back the construction of the new 8,800-foot parallel runway for many months; also, the city hesitated to sell revenue bonds for almost $1,000,000 worth of extra parking in the form of a second deck at the airport, Coker said.

Love Field is a healthy operation, financially, Coker said. "Based on the facts presented, The annual revenue for the field alone is $2,000,000 plus, including a little more than $1,000,000 in concession revenues."

Expenses of $750,000 a year at low the healthy balance to go to ward paying off revenue bonds and expansion expenses, he said. But the big financial lift for Dallas is in the airport tenants, such as commercial airlines, service companies, etc.

"They give Dallas a $43,000,000 annual payroll," said Coker. "Our Fort Worth opponents be-

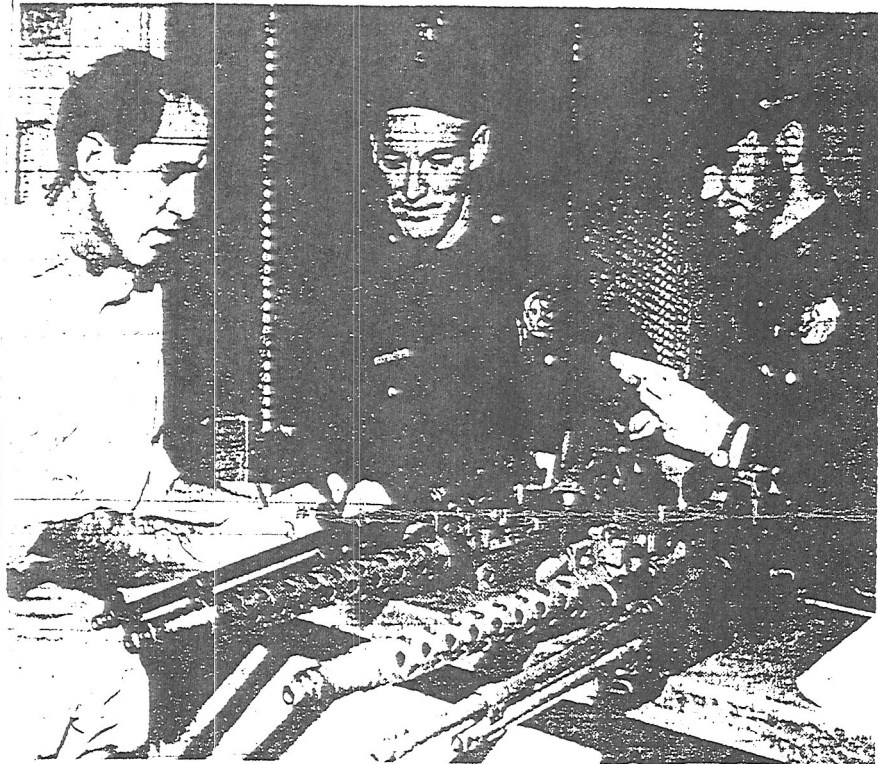

When airport employees will be directed to use a separate temporary lot, Coker said. A recent permit granted Earl Hayes to install a valet parking service there (charge — $1.50) should ease the situation, also, he said.

"There's no way to park 2,000 cars within 50 feet of the front door," Coker told the council.
